Basically, much of this commentary is "sermonic" in character and in fact were sermons of Rabbi Levi Yitzchak (and for me, as a rabbi and teacher myself, that gives it MORE value, not less!). Professor Munk, wanted to make this translation, like his other translations, more of a Torah commentary and wanted to focus on that aspect of the work.

Kedushat Levi reads this in a mystical way. This isn't just a passage about working and cessation of work, or about the building of the tabernacle and then pausing from that building. When our ancestors built the mishkan, they were really repairing human speech of its brokenness. When they paused from that building, on Shabbat, and prayed and studied Torah instead, they were repairing the ...
