Ellipsis Reference Substitution As Cohesive

The substitute do is almost always anaphoric; it may presuppose an element within the same sentence as itself, so there is already a structural relation linking the presupposed to the presupposing clauses; but it frequently substitutes for an element in a proceeding sentence, and therefore it is, like the nominal substitute, a primary source of cohesion within a text. Only occasionally it is cataphoric, and then only within the sentence, and so making no contribution to cohesion; an example ...
