Form is one of the seven elements of art which are the visual tools that an artist uses to compose a work of art. In addition, to form, they include line, shape, value, color, texture, and space . As an Element of Art, form connotes something that is three-dimensional and encloses volume, having length, width, and height, versus shape, which is two-dimensional, or flat.

-Making Art: Form and Meaning, chapter 13, page 248. All artists should value critiques as way to receive feedback on their work. Critiques should be approached in an open-minded manner and the artist should not take it as a personal critique on themselves. Rather the critique should be received as how your work comes across to others.

Making Art: Form and Meaning : Terry Barrett : 9780072521788

Doing art can mean undertaking a course of study in art, just as one can do Engineering, Maths or English. In the context of your question, though, doing art is contrasted with making art, not 'doing' some other course of study. In this context, saying that one does art refers to the mechanics of the endeavour, whereas saying that one makes art focuses on more sublime aspects such as creativity, beauty and so on.

word choice - Difference between "doing art" and "making ...

A good definition of art, it seems to me, might be the science of making meaning-making tools. One reason subject matter has become central to discussions of art in this era of hot takes and think pieces is that viewing art as subject matter, especially political subject matter, makes it voluble, productive of discourse.
