 1 Strive for consistency. Consistent sequences of actions should be required in similar situations; identical terminology should be used in prompts, menus, and help screens; and consistent commands should be employed throughout.

Shneiderman's Eight Golden Rules of Interface Design

In order to do that, software engineers must follow some rules for user interface design called golden rules. There are three golden rules and they are: Place the User in Control Users want to control the computer but does not want to be controlled by the computer. So, user interface constraints specified by the designer must simplify the mode of user's interaction with the computer.

User interface must not frustrate the user.
