The Legal Framework For Water

Legal frameworks, ideally, should deal with the entire water body all a country's or basin's water resources, whether it is surface or ground water. Thus, legal regimes should be devised at a range of scales – from international (where the water body is shared by more than one State), regional (where regional legal regimes apply, such as, for example, within the European Union); and national (i.e. within nation States, where domestic legislation applies).
