Josey Baker Bread

Soon his experiments with whole grains led him to mill his own flour. While some bakers would never bother to add more complications to the already arduous process of producing bread, Josey saw fresh-milled flour as the new frontier in baking. "A loaf of bread that uses fresh-milled flour is the most alive bread one can taste. It's more vibrant than any other type of bread," he professes. "You get more of whatever it is that bread has to offer. The most notable difference is aroma, which is ...
