According the people I've spoken to at ACER support, the universal connector on the K132 doesn't actually allow connections to anything at all. This is a definition of "universal" I've never heard before. Has anyone heard anything differently, or gotten the K132 to work with a VGA input? The whole idea of buying a portable projector is for it ...

Th manual I got with the projector shows a picture even with the universal io cable to audio out shown and listed. If this really isn't supported then in guess the manual and specs are wrong. I find this very odd because the onboard speaker isn't even usable. You can barely hear anything so external is a must. That's a real deal breaker.
