Retained earnings is a source of assets, but is not an asset itself. For example, even though the funds obtained from issuing a note payable are invested in the business, the note payable is not reported as an asset. It is a source of assets, but it is reported as a liability because the company has an obligation to repay the note in the future.

Chapter 5 Intermediate Accounting: Questions

Flashcards ...

Companies have to periodically test intangible assets to see whether there's potential for any loss due to impairment. If the impairment loss isn't recoverable, under U.S. GAAP, the company has to adjust the books to reflect this lessening in value. The basic criteria for measuring recoverability centers on whether the asset's carrying value is recoverable from its undiscounted cash flows.
