INJECTOR The injector serves to introduce the liquid sample into the flow stream the mobile phase. Typical sample volumes are 5-20 microliters The injector must also be able to withstand the high pressure of the liquid system. An auto sampler is the automatic version for when the user has many samples to analyze or when manual injection is not practical.

HPLC Instrument. High-performance liquid chromatography (HPLC) (also called high-pressure liquid chromatography) is a solution-phase technique for fractionation of complex samples. Unlike standard column chromatography, HPLC is an active process in which materials are pumped at high pressure through the separation column, which contains the so-called "stationary phase" of the separation in the form of densely packed, often chemically functionalized beads.

A Review on High Performance Liquid Chromatography (HPLC)

High-performance liquid chromatography, formerly referred to as high-pressure liquid chromatography, is a technique in analytical chemistry used to separate, identify, and quantify each component in a mixture. It relies on pumps to pass a pressurized liquid solvent containing the sample mixture through a column filled with a solid adsorbent material. Each component in the sample interacts slightly differently with the adsorbent material, causing different flow rates for the different components
