Prior to World War I, the campus featured the Student Life newspaper, The Buzzer yearbook, plus the Ag-Literose, published by the Quill Club, a student writers' organization. Today, USU continues to foster student writing through The Statesman, the student newspaper; Sink Hollow, an undergraduate literary journal; the annual Voices of USU anthology; and Aggie Blue Print, among others. The Bull Pen is a creative writing club hosted by the Department of English.

I have worked as an intern for the Voices program for the past year and this summer I helped to overhaul the program's anthology, Voices in Print. As we discussed the possibility of expanding the anthology, I became interested in the specific challenges inherent to this type of document. This spring, I also had an opportunity to be published in a similar anthology of student work: Scribendi, a ...

On the cover of the 2014 edition, the word, “Voices” is made up of prominent words and titles from essays included in that book. The 2015 edition displays sound waves in order to represent the combination of voices written as well spoken. I did this because 2015 was the inaugural year of the Citizen Scholar Conference – where student authors, whose work was published in the anthology were also invited to present their work at a university-wide conference.

DREAMing Out Loud is a series of tuition-free writing workshops for young, undocumented students from the City University of New York, who came to the United States when they were children. The program seeks to counter the anti-immigrant sentiment on the rise in the United States and to amplify the voices of many living in this country who are marginalized because of their immigration status.
