Plasma etching of polymers is commonly used in the removal of polymeric photoresists in integrated circuits. Anisotropic plasma etching transfers even submicron features into polymer films, which forms high resolution lithographic masks. In plasma etching it is possible to selectively etch the polymers from a composite.

Plasma etching is a form of plasma processing used to fabricate integrated circuits. It involves a high-speed stream of glow discharge of an appropriate gas mixture being shot at a sample. The plasma source, known as etch species, can be either charged or neutral. During the process, the plasma generates volatile etch products at room temperature from the chemical reactions between the elements of the material etched and the reactive species generated by the plasma. Eventually the atoms of the s
