Abstract. Forty-five infants and children with intrathoracic tracheobronchial obstructions requiring surgical treatment are reported. Segmental stenosis of the trachea is defined as involvement of less than one half the length of the airway, which affected six infants. Elongated stenosis involving more than one half the length of the trachea was seen in 12 infants, and complete annular cartilage rings, along the entire length of the trachea, were present in 11.

Tracheobronchial injury is damage to the tracheobronchial tree. It can result from blunt or penetrating trauma to the neck or chest, inhalation of harmful fumes or smoke, or aspiration of liquids or objects. Though rare, TBI is a serious condition; it may cause obstruction of the airway with resulting life-threatening respiratory insufficiency. Other injuries accompany TBI in about half of cases. Of those people with TBI who die, most do so before receiving emergency care, either
