Medium voltage – MV – public distribution networks are constructed on the basis of two fundamental parameters which influence the majority of their components as well as their operation. These parameters are the neutral management mode and the operating voltage. Selection of these parameters has a very high impact on the whole network, and it is very difficult, if not impossible or economically unrealistic, to alter them subsequently.

Basic selection of MV public distribution networks

Every medium voltage switchgear has control, protection and signalization equipment installed. They are visible, easy to read and operate as they are divided into three sections: low voltage compartment, circuit breaker compartment and compartment for visual indication of the position of the circuit breaker.
