The Marriage Artist: A novel, by Andrew Winer, is an incredible literary feat, in my opinion. The novel is a brilliantly composed saga of two stories that alternate within the pages. It is a book with broad and deep expanses, beginning in current times, and sweeping back to Vienna, beginning in 1928.

This novel, while full of imagery and sensation, is all about the inside of people's heads. I finished reading this book at noon yesterday and find it on my mind at every quiet moment. There are so many very good questions (and equally interesting answers proposed) in the book that the residual "cud" will keep me chewing for quite a while.

The Henna Artist by Alka Joshi - Goodreads

A beautifully written novel that creates a plausible reason for Ovid's banishment. The novel portrays Ovid as a writer who finds his inspiration and raw material in the women in his life. He is also very obsessed with being remembered by history. Zenia's ability to see the future juxtaposed with the historical past is quite effective.
