A variety of checklists and rating scales have been developed in recent years to meet the critical need for accurate anxiety measurement. Two of these measures, the Beck Anxiety Inventory (BAI) and the Structured Interview Guide for the Hamilton Anxiety Scale (SIGH-A) are well established and widely used instruments for measuring anxiety symptoms, demonstrating good validity and reliability.

Concurrent Validation of the Burns Anxiety Inventory-Revised Using the Beck Anxiety Inventory and the Burns Anxiety Inventory

Anxiety disorders are a pervasive problem in the United States and throughout the world. The high prevalence of anxiety disorders clearly evidences a necessity for valid and reliable assessment instruments for researchers and clinicians. In recent years, a variety of checklists and rating scales have emerged that assess for the presence of anxiety symptoms. Two of these instruments, the Beck Anxiety Inventory and the Burns Anxiety Inventory, constitute two widely used and well researched self-report scales for measuring anxiety symptoms. Both of these instruments demonstrate good reliability and validity. The purpose of the present study was to evaluate the concurrent validity of the Burns Anxiety Inventory-Revised, a recently developed self-report measure for anxiety for which there is a paucity of validity research. This was accomplished by correlating scores on the Burns Anxiety Inventory-Revised using a sample of 100 undergraduate participants. The correlations found among these inventories resulted in statistically significant correlation coefficients, suggesting that the Burns Anxiety Inventory-Revised is a valid measure of anxiety. Additionally, the Burns A-R demonstrated high item intercorrelation suggesting the instrument is a homogenous scale.

The Beck Depression Inventory and the State-trait Anxiety Inventory as Predictors of DSM-III Affective Diagnosis and Treatment Compliance

Concurrent Validation of the Structured Interview Guide for the Hamilton Anxiety Scale Using the Beck Anxiety Inventory, the Burns Anxiety Inventory, and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory

Anxiety disorders are a serious problem in our world, afflicting millions of people worldwide, including adolescents and individuals diagnosed with Autism Spectrum Disorders (ASD). Valid and reliable measures of anxiety disorders are essential for accurate assessment and treatment of this disorder with individuals also diagnosed with ASDs. Several self-report measures have been developed to meet the need for accurate anxiety measurements. The Beck Anxiety Inventory (BAI), the Burns Anxiety Inventory (33 item) and the State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI) are established and widely used instruments for measuring anxiety symptoms. These instruments demonstrate good validity and reliability within the general population. The BAI is extensively used in assessing anxiety in adolescents with Asperger's Disorder and High Functioning Autism (HFA). The purpose of the present study is to determine the concurrent validity of the Structured Interview Guide for the Hamilton Anxiety Scale (SIGH-A), a semi-structured interview to assess anxiety in individuals with Asperger's Disorder and HFA. Fifteen individuals diagnosed with Asperger's Disorder or HFA were recruited to participate in this study. They were administered the BAI, Burns Anxiety Inventory (33 item), STAI, and SIGH-A. Correlation coefficients were calculated to determine the relationship between scores on each of these measures. The results of this study suggest that the SIGH-A has acceptable concurrent validity. Limitations of this study and recommendations for future research are also discussed.
