OPIC (Ontology-driven Patient Information Capture) is a data collection framework that utilizes the Epilepsy and Seizure ontology to standardize data entry and representation, proactively enforce data accuracy, and support logical skip patterns [22, 23]. While related in approach, our work focuses on using the ontology to extract and represent clinical data; we also show how an ontology-driven approach can be applied to another domain with differing information requirements.

We use an ontology-driven approach to integrate two gene resources (Entrez Gene and HomoloGene) and three pathway resources (KEGG, Reactome and BioCyc), for five organisms, including humans. We created the Entrez Knowledge Model (EKoM), an information model in OWL for the gene resources, and integrated it with the extant BioPAX ontology designed for pathway resources.
