Death 24x a Second: Stillness and the Moving Image by ...

In her fascinating Death 24x a Second, Laura Mulvey offers a particularly ingenious division of the history of cinema. In its first phase, she argues, cinema was dominated by the marvel that she names the 'technological uncanny': even documentary footage could seem strange and magical, and fiction films frequently followed the trail of such wonderment.

Death 24x a Second: Stillness and the Moving Image

Mulvey recalls this scene in her book Death 24x a Second, as she engages in a dialogue with Barthes, for whom cinema was normally free from the elegiac effects that he described in photography. The project of Mulvey's book, as described in the subtitle, is to bring to the surface the repressed stillness of the moving image, and by doing so, return to cinema many of the attributes that Barthes rules out.

Death 24x a Second ~ painterly character of the illusions of the magic lantern, the tradition of human ingenuity, returned to visual culture. Lev Manovich describes this return: The manual construction of images in digital cinema represents a return to nineteenth century pre-cinematic practices, when images were hand-painted and hand-animated.
