Abstract— We apply coset codes to adaptive modulation in fading channels. Adaptive modulation is a powerful technique to improve the energy efficiency and increase the data rate over a fading channel. Coset codes are a natural choice to use with adaptive modulation since the channel coding and modulation designs are separable.

Adaptive Coded Modulation For Fading Channels ...

Adaptive modulation is a powerful technique to improve the energy efficiency and increase the data rate over a fading channel. Coset codes are a natural choice to use with adaptive modulation since the channel coding and modulation designs are separable. Therefore, trellis and lattice codes designed for additive white Gaussian noise (AWGN) channels can be superimposed on adaptive modulation for fading channels, with the same approximate coding gains.

We consider coded modulation schemes for the block-fading channel. In the setting where a codeword spans a finite number N of fading degrees of freedom, we show that coded modulations of rate R bit/complex dimension, over a finite signal set $\mathcal{X}$ of size 2^M , achieve the optimal rate-diversity tradeoff given by the Singleton bound $(N; M; R) = 1 + bN(1 - R/M)^c$, for $R \in [0, M]$.

In Chapter 4, we presented a background on the aspects of trellis-coded modulation schemes and evaluated the performance of these schemes on the AWGN channel. In this chapter we present the design and performance of the TCM schemes for a fading channel. We begin with the performance evaluation of trellis codes over a Rician fading channel.

With this objective in mind a general coded transmission system over fading channels will be described. To study the performance of the coded signaling schemes over fading channels the random coding bounding technique will be employed. In this approach the error bound is evaluated for an ensemble of coded signaling schemes rather than for a specific one.

Digital Transmission Over Fading Channels | SpringerLink

This thesis is mainly concerned with channel estimation issues in coded modulation systems where different diversity techniques are exploited to combat fading in single or multiple antenna systems. First, for single antenna systems in fast time-varying fading channels, the thesis focuses on designing a training sequence by exploiting signal space diversity (SSD).

Channel Estimation in Coded Modulation Systems - CORE

Under fairly general conditions, a channel affected by fading can be turned into an additive white Gaussian noise (AWGN) channel by increasing the number of diversity branches. Consequently, it can be expected (and is indeed verified by our analyses and simulations) that a coded modulation scheme designed to be optimal for the AWGN channel also will perform asymptotically well on a fading channel with diversity.
