Free Space Optics: Enabling Optical Connectivity in Today ...

Free-space optical communication is an optical communication technology that uses light propagating in free space to wirelessly transmit data for telecommunications or computer networking. "Free space" means air, outer space, vacuum, or something similar. This contrasts with using solids such as optical fiber cable. The technology is useful where the physical connections are impractical due to high costs or other considerations.

Free-Space Optics: Enabling Optical Connectivity In Today's Networks covers topics including system installation, laser safety (the lasers used in FSO are eye-safe and must comply with specifications set by the International Electrotechnical Commission), service-provider issues, and overall market analysis.

Free Space Optical Communications — Theory and Practices ...

FSO communication systems are where free space acts as a communication channel between transceivers that are line-of-sight (LOS) for successful transmission of optical signals. The channel can be atmosphere, space, or vacuum, whose characteristics determine the transmission and reception of optical signals for designing reliable and efficient communication systems.

That technology is free-space optics (FSO). This line-of-sight technology approach uses invisible beams of light to provide optical bandwidth connections. It's capable of sending up to 1.25 Gbps of data, voice, and video communications simultaneously through the air — enabling fiber-optic connectivity without requiring physical fiber-optic cable.

Different modulation techniques exists which are well suited for the free space optical communication. Most commonly used modulation techniques are on-off keying (OOK), pulse position modulation (PPM), differential phase shift keying (DPSK), differential quadrature phase shift keying (DQPSK) and subcarrier intensity modulation (SIM) , . In this paper, we have carried out analysis using OOK as it is the simplest modulation technique.
