Gerrymandering In America The House

Cromartie (2001), the Supreme Court approved a racially focused gerrymandering of a congressional district on the grounds that the definition was not pure racial gerrymandering but instead partisan gerrymandering, which is constitutionally permissible. With the increasing racial polarization of parties in the South in the U.S. as conservative whites move from the Democratic to the Republican Party, gerrymandering may become partisan and also achieve goals for ethnic representation.

From a constitutional perspective, unrestrained partisan gerrymandering poses a critical threat to a central pillar of American democracy, popular sovereignty. State legislatures now effectively determine the political composition of the US House.

Gerrymandering in America by Anthony J. McGann

In the American system, the biggest target of gerrymandering is the House of Representatives. The members of the Senate are elected by the entire state and thus are exempt from boundary redrawing. The Constitution requires that a census of the population be taken every ten years, and that the seats in the House be reapportioned (and their districts redrawn) as necessary.
