A Beginner's Guide to Neural Networks: Part One. Humans are incredible pattern-recognition machines. Our brains process 'inputs' from the world, categorize them (that's a spider; that's ice-cream), and then generate an 'output' (run away from the spider; taste the ice-cream). And we do this automatically and quickly, with little or no effort. It's the very same system that senses that someone is angry at us, or involuntarily reads the stop sign as we speed past it.
