BPMN is used when designing and improving the business process, whereas BPEL is used when implementing it. Different requirements exist in different phases. Second, BPMN is used by business analysts, and BPEL is used by technical analysts and programmers. They use different paradigms and focus on separate issues when modeling a process.

Transforming BPMN into BPEL: Why and How

A.bpel file (and a template.wsdl file, if you have chosen to use any of the two non-empty templates) will be created. Each BPEL process needs a WSDL to expose itself as a web service (which means a BPEL process can be reused and treated as if it is just normal web service).

OMII-BPEL: User guide

The Business Process Modeling Notation (BPMN) has been developed to enable business user to develop readily understandable graphical representations of business processes. BPMN is also supported with appropriate graphical object properties that will enable the generation of executable BPEL.

Using BPMN to Model a BPEL Process

While the availability of these services can be represented by using a Web Services Description Language (WSDL) document, a BPEL document describes the typical way in which the product companies are expected to call the services and how to expect responses from Wide World Importers.
