Jake's dad won't let Tom skip the functions, so the Yeerks try first to infest his father and then to kill him. Jake and the Animorphs manage to prevent these attacks from succeeding, but Jake is coming apart at the seams and making bad decisions because he's too close to the issues, so Marco is running the show. Finally, they decide to cause an attack of their own to distract the Yeerks from caring about Tom's Yeerk, and they kidnap Chapman because he's a more powerful Controller.

Also, the Animorphs will have to tell their parents eventually, and now may have been a good time, like telling Cassie's parents might have been useful when Ax was sick in #29. People who fought in different wars understanding each other is a great theme. Here, it helps drive home the point that Jake has trouble coping with what he's going.
