Cultural Neutrality is not the way to go in today's global world, it may have value in a single company model such as IBM and the work that Hofstede did to define cultural dimensions, which is the point of Assumption 1, we are in a world as he describes "projects today bring together people from both different companies and different cultures".

The Need for Culture Neutrality

Only 15 percent said their culture was "exactly where it needed to be;" 92 percent admitted that improving their firm's corporate culture would enhance the value of the company.
