Two basic mechanisms can control the rate and extent of drug release. These are: (1) dissolution of the active drug component (2) diffusion of dissolved species. Disintegration and Dissolution.

Disintegration is a physical process that occurs when a dosage form (e.g. tablet or gelatine capsule) breaks up into smaller particles. It usually takes place in two steps; the content breaks up into small granules which then disaggregate.

For immediate release drug products in vivo this breaking up process of the dosage form usually starts in the stomach where it may be completed depending upon the formulation, duration and volume of gastric fluid.

Dissolution testing is a requirement for all solid oral dosage forms and is used throughout the development life-cycle for product release and stability testing. It is a pivotal analytical test used for detecting physical changes in an active pharmaceutical ingredient and formulated product. At the early stages of the drug development process, in-vitro dissolution testing underpins the optimisation of drug-release from a given formulation.

Albendazole Solid Dispersions: Influence of Dissolution ...

Dissolution is an important step during preformulation studies because the rate of drug dissolution of a drug will exert a direct impact on bioavailability and drug delivery aspects (Bergstrom et al., 2014). Dissolution can be defined as the process through which drug particles tend to dissolve in the body fluids. Any change in drug dissolution will significantly affect the bioavailability.

The inner layer then rapidly dissolves and thus boosts drug release. The accelerated drug release of prednisolone DuoCoat ® tablets in comparison with the standard enteric-coated tablets was proven in vitro in bio-relevant media 11 (Hank's buffer pH 5.6) which followed a two-hour incubation period in acidic medium (Figure 1b).
