The Elizabethan sonnet (also called the Shakespearean sonnet) is also in iambic pentameter, but it usually follows a structure of three quatrains (four line stanzas) of cross-rhyme followed by a couplet: abab cdcd efef gg. The volta usually still comes with the ninth line, but in Shakespeare's sonnets it often comes with the 13th. In England, sonnets often circulated privately in manuscript among an elite audience before finding their way into print.
