The notion of responsibility is at the heart of not only the Responsibility to Protect (R2P) doctrine, but also of international criminal justice and responses to mass atrocities more broadly. The global pandemic the world currently faces forces us to rethink how we conceive of responsibility today, and the implications for the international community’s ability to respond to mass atrocities.

Responsibility to Protect Student Journal

Therefore, R2P is principally about sovereignty, particularly constitutional sovereignty, in which the state carries the responsibility to protect the citizens in the political community, although there are many other discourses concerning sovereignty in political thought, such as parliamentary and popular sovereignty.
