Most commonly, the terms "Old South" and "New South" are defined as the time periods prior to, and respectively post American Civil War, which lasted from 1861 until 1865. At the same time however, they also implicate cultural change, as the Old South, often referred to as the "land of plantations, slave owners, aristocracy and agricultural philosophy" (Cotterill 3), gave way to the development of manufacturing (Cotterill 4).
