The Impact Of Martial Arts

Interests in the social-psychological effects of martial arts date back to the 1960s, but it wasn't until the mid-'90s that focus turned toward youth practitioners. Researchers previously examined the typical traits martial arts focused on (e.g. reducing stress/anxiety, self-esteem, humility, independence, etc.). That changed, and instead, they began focusing on purely the hostility and anger found in practitioners over anything else.
