Conversations About Ethics: Cultivating Compassion - The ...

Or grief is not a virtue, is it? Well, it can be. I wanted to talk to you about grief, because it's a related experience to both compassion and dying. And you talk very much, which I think is a Buddhist approach to this — you talk about grief as a burden and a gift. Ms. Halifax: Yes. From my point of view, the experience of grief is profoundly humanizing and that we need to create conditions where we are supported to grieve and where we're not told, "Why don't you just get over it ..."
