When I first started developing in APEX (back when it was called HTMLDB) I had a requirement for a tabular form. I tried to use the standard tabular forms but it was very limited and I couldn't customize it to meet my requirements. I had poked around on the APEX forum, but wasn't able to find a reasonable solution.

Manually Creating a Tabular Form | TalkApex

Tabular forms are a powerful feature but also something the most of the Apex developers have a problem with. The manual from the How-To's is outdated, confusing and it is also incorrect in several issues. Also, there are not many other resources in the community dedicated to the problem of operating with tabular forms.

As mentioned earlier, this project is built on a manual tabular form based on a collection. The SQL to create the collection is actually very simple, but the SQL to generate the tabular form itself is not. Rather than trying to write the statement for the tabular form within the region, I opted to create a database function that returns a SQL statement string the region can use. This function ...
