In data vis, the way you chose your colors depends on your data. There are two options: For continuous data you use color gradients, and for categorical data you use distinctive colors. To explain that in a bit more depth: You would use color gradients if you have data that progresses from low to high, e.g unemployment rates on a map. Colors in a gradient should communicate: "I represent a value that's a bit higher or lower than the color next to me."
