The European Standard EN 12697-25 is responsible for cyclic compressions tests to address the high temperature behavior of HMAs. Two methods are implemented in the standard, the uniaxial cyclic compression test with restricted radial strain and the triaxial

Assessment of Permanent Deformation Behavior of Asphalt ...

For the characterization of the permanent deformation behavior (rutting) of asphalt concrete (AC), the triaxial cyclic compression test (TCCT) is a standardized test method. The test simulates traffic loading by applying a sinusoidal compressive stress in vertical direction and a radial confining pressure, which simulates the confinement of the specimen within the pavement structure.
