Reading As A Perceptual Process

Current conceptions of visuo-spatial and lexical processing during reading (e.g., Reichle, Pollatsek, Fisher and Rayner, 1998) assume that attention confines recognition processes to a single word at a time and that interword saccades are triggered by the completion of an initial stage of lexical processing while attention is exclusively allocated to the fixated word.

Perceptual interpretation is an integral part of the perception process. Without interpretation, selection and organisation of information do not make any sense. After the information has been received and organised, the perceiver interprets or assigns meaning to the information.

Stages Involved in Perception Process

The perceptual process is a sequence of steps that begins with the environment and leads to our perception of a stimulus and action in response to the stimulus. It occurs continuously, but you do not spend a great deal of time thinking about the actual process that occurs when you perceive the many stimuli that surround you at any given moment.

What Is Perception?

Visual perception is the ability to interpret the surrounding environment using light in the visible spectrum reflected by the objects in the environment. This is different from visual acuity, which refers to how clearly a person sees (for example "20/20 vision"). A person can have problems with visual perceptual processing even if they have 20/20 vision.

Visual perception - Wikipedia

Perception refers to the way sensory information is organized, interpreted, and consciously experienced. Perception involves both bottom-up and top-down processing. Bottom-up processing refers to the fact that perceptions are built from sensory input. On the other hand, how we interpret those sensations is influenced by our available knowledge ...
