The excitement of modern art is often seen to lie in its radical break with the past. But according to one standard narrative, the modern discipline of art history began only with a study of ancient art and sculpture. Johann Joachim Winckelmann's History of the Art of Antiquity, first published in 1764, set the precedent for the historical study of the visual arts, and is still the dominant method in art history today.

Examples of the fascination of ancient Greek and ancient Roman art exercised on Picasso could be the series of drawings Nessus and Deianeira from 1920 or the figure of the Minotaur, which often appears in Picasso's drawings and sketches. Reflecting the strong relationship between modern artists and Greek and Roman art, the sculptor Auguste Rodin demonstrated through his fruitful artistic production an explosive engagement with ancient statuary.
