Your oil filler cap allows you to replace oil that has leaked out or fill your engine after an oil change. In some cases, this may be a threaded or twist-on design. Other oil caps, especially on older vehicles, use a breather element that also helps with crankcase ventilation.

In most cases, we check the level of engine oil via the dipstick on the side of the engine. The only time that we tend to open the oil cap is
 during a scheduled oil change. This often occurs every 5,000 to 10,000 miles,
 depending on the age,
 make, and model of
 our vehicles.
 Sometimes, we also top-off our engine oil in between oil changes.

What is This White Stuff Under My Oil Cap? | Car Bibles

The first thing to check its whether there's too much oil in the engine. Check the dipstick for normal oil level. If it is over filled, do NOT drive the car. Drain the oil, replace with the proper amount, and hope the engine is not permanently damaged. There is excessive blow-by past the rings. Remove the filler cap and start the engine. There should be little or no smoke or oil blowing out when the engine is idling.

What is the reason for the oil leak from the oil cap ...

If it happens that the head gasket is damaged or blown, there is a possibility of the coolant to leak into the chamber of combustion or the engine oil passage. The latter is the one which causes the oil cap to be milky. One easy way to check for this is by evaluating the engine oil dipstick.

Fill to three-quarters of the engine's capacity to avoid overfilling, as there is always oil that does not drain. Then replace the cap. Step 10 – Run the engine for a few minutes to make sure there are no leaks. Check the area around the oil drain

plug and the filter for any leaks.
