Ken Loach's much-loved classic is the basis for this lesson looking at how to 'translate' from text to screen. This lesson helps students understand the process of adaptation. It asks them to think about how they might translate the written word into live action by pulling out key moments from an extract and visualising them using a storyboard. By asking students to consider imagery, characterisation and action, this lesson encourages students to think about the ways in which texts are ...

Billy's only solace is when he obtains a Kestrel, and trains it. Bullied by children and teachers at school, and coming from a broken home in the first place plus a lazy slovenly mother, we are taken on a journey of Billy's life. We learn at the very end why Billy's father left home. The ending is not happy, nor is it meant to be.
