To confirm the universality of the polarized redox model, we need more studies on other worldwide subduction zones.

Seismicity at subduction zones. Subduction zones are characterised by seismicity from the surface down to almost 700 km depth, and are often referred to as Wadati-Benioff zones (Benioff, 1949; Wadati, 1928, 1935). Seismicity is often classified as shallow (0–70 km), intermediate (70–300 km) and deep (300–700 km).

In most subduction zones, the subducting oceanic crust passes through the blueschist→eclogite metamorphic facies transition where continuous dehydration reactions may release large amounts of H₂O. Integrated over time, aqueous fluids released from the subducting slab cause extensive hydration of the overlying mantle wedge and trigger partial melting in the core of the convecting mantle wedge. The subduction tectonics of the Philippines is the control of geology over the Philippine archipelago. The Philippine region is seismically active and has been progressively constructed by plates converging towards each other in multiple directions.
