I purchased Time, Love, Memory based on my fondness for Jonathan Weiner's Pulitzer Prize winning book, The Beak of the Finch. Like that book, Time, Love, Memory explores an important scientific theme through the lives and experiments of notable scientists. As a Brandeis alum, I especially enjoyed the portions of the book about Brandeis professors Jeff Hall and Michael Rosbash, but each scientist mentioned gets some character study as well as a description of his or her work.

Indeed, time, love, and memory (and thus learning) have become associated with specific fly genes. And these genes have counterparts in mammals, including humans. Benzer et al. are saying that behavior as well as the housekeeping rules that govern cellular metabolism get encoded in living organisms as products of evolutionary adaptation.
