Creatio Ex Nihilo The Doctrine

Furthermore, creation ex nihilo acknowledges that all that exists except God was created by God a finite time ago. Finally, the doctrine of creation ex nihilo rules out the idea that such finite realities as space, time, and matter emanate from the essence of God: creation is neither divine nor a derivative of God’s essence.

What Is the Doctrine of Creation Out of Nothing (Creatio ...

Everything that is real that exists other than God has been created by God. This is the doctrine of creatio ex nihilo which lies at the very heart of the doctrine of creation. The phrase in Latin – creatio ex nihilo – means literally “creation out of nothing.” But when theologians affirm that God has created the world out of nothing, they do not mean that he has created it out of something and that is nothing.

The theological significance of the doctrine of creatio ex ...

The doctrine of creation ex nihilo was mostly developed due to the rising pressure of Gnosticism. This view drew a distinction between the God of the Old Testament, the one they believed had created this world, and the God of the New Testament, the one they believed had redeemed this world. The God of the OT was also regarded as a lesser deity than the God of the NT.

Creation out of nothing - Theopedia.com

The implications of the doctrine of creatio ex nihilo can be better understood when we compare the doctrine to the false options that it excludes. If God created out of nothing, then God did not create out of something. Nor, if God created out of nothing, did God create out of his own divine being.

Creation Ex Nihilo and the Power of God
