In Building Genetic Medicine, Shobita Parthasarathy shows how, even in an era of globalization, national context is playing an important role in the development and use of genetic technologies. Focusing on the development and deployment of genetic testing for breast and ovarian cancer (known as BRCA testing) in the United States and Britain, Parthasarathy develops a comparative analysis framework in order to investigate how national "toolkits" shape both regulations and the architectures ...

Building Genetic Medicine. Prof. Parthasarathy's first book, Building Genetic Medicine, explores the development and implications of genetic testing for breast and ovarian cancer (BRCA testing) in the United States and Great Britain. It explores the international "race" to find the BRCA genes, the early competition among testing providers, the impact of the BRCA gene patents on testing provision and use, the integration of BRCA testing into health care, and the controversies over the BRCA ...

The study, published in the scientific journal Nature, has uncovered a genetic vulnerability present in nearly 10% percent of all breast cancers tumours, and found a way to target this vulnerability and selectively kill cancer cells. Each year, over five thousand newly diagnosed cases of breast cancer in the UK alone will carry this particular genetic fault, a proportion roughly double that driven by hereditary mutations such as those in the well-known BRCA genes.
