One of the most common titrations performed in a Chemistry lab is an acid-base titration. In the Initial Investigation, you will be assigned an acid solution to titrate with a solution of the strong base sodium hydroxide, NaOH. The concentration of the NaOH solution is given and you will determine the concentration of the acid solution.

Investigation 14 Investigating Acid-Base Titrations

In this lab, acid-base titrations will be performed in order to investigate the relationship between pH, concentration, and the structure of acids and bases. Students will carry out multiple acid-base titrations and will use a pH meter to monitor the pH of the resulting solutions. Students will then construct titration curves.

When looking at the graph of an acid base titration, the equivalence point is where the amount of acid and base is equal. The half-equivalence point is where the amount of base is equal to half the amount of acid in the solution. The curves for the titration of different strengths of acids and bases differ. A buffer solution is one that resists changes in pH.
