In this chapter, we review recent advances in Nd-Fe-B based permanent magnets that have been made in the last 10 years with a historical review of the early developments of Nd-Fe-B magnets in the 1980s. The basic technology in the commercial production of Nd-Fe-B permanent magnets was established within a decade after its invention in 1983.

The main advantage of permanent magnets (PMs) is that they do not waste power as heat to create a magnetic field. PMs are candidates to replace any room temperature DC electromagnet (EM) in accelerator or free-electron laser (FEL) systems.

Permanent Magnets - an overview | ScienceDirect Topics

Equally important has been the recent development of rare-earth permanent magnets. Advances in rare-earth magnet materials have revolutionized the field of magnetic separation. The advent of rare-earth permanent magnets in the 1980's provided a magnetic energy product an order of magnitude greater than that of conventional ferrite magnets.

Permanent magnets are also highlighted as paradigmatic examples of the close relationship between basic research industry and technological implementation, as basic research advances may be directly transitioned to realization of better magnets with enhanced technical performance.

Advanced Permanent Magnetic Materials

Recent constraints on availability and cost increase of rare-earth (RE) elements have stimulated a strong interest in the discovery of rare-earth-free materials with excellent permanent-magnet properties. Materials having energy products between alnico and Nd₂Fe₁₄B, in the range of 15 to 25 MGOe, would have important applications in energy conversion technologies.
