Feminist political ecology developed in geography through the 1990s, drawing upon empirical field research in political ecology and a constructivist feminist theory of gender. Feminist political ecology presents a strong critique of the essentialist aspects of ecofeminism for a failure to adequately address both the material and the ideological bases for women's environmental actions, and draws upon the alternative conceptualizations (described above) developing outside the discipline of ...

Since the publication of Feminist Political Ecology, there has been an almost seismic shift in theoretical approaches to gender in the social sciences more generally, as poststructuralist and performative approaches in feminist theory (e.g. Butler, 2004) have challenged role-based and relational approaches to gender that rest predominantly on fixed notions of the autonomous subject, and that focus on men's and women's differentiated access to and control of environmental resources and ...
