The Science of Making Things Go Viral. In

today's marketing landscape, the barrier to entry for creating and publishing new content is at an all-time low. That means social networks and other distribution channels are flooded with content – and so naturally, as a way of filtering and screening our feeds, we gravitate to the content that everyone else is sharing.

Your decision making is the result of a fight between two kinds of cognitive processes.

The first, called System 1, is an automatic intuitive system. The second (you guessed it, System 2), is an effortful rational system. System 1 is fast, implicit, and bottom-up, while system 2 is slow, explicit, and top-down.
