Theoretical Issues in Reading Comprehension - Taylor & Francis

Theoretical issues in reading comprehension. For many years, the study of reading was taken to apply almost exclusively to the process of learning the written code. It was often assumed that once a child could recognize words in their written form, the understanding system already available from the child's oral language experience would permit comprehension to proceed smoothly.

Theoretical issues in reading comprehension - Chip's journey

After several influential theories and models of reading comprehension are outlined, the chapter examines the factors affecting reading comprehension process, namely, reader, text and the interaction between reader and text. The chapter ends with Khalifa and Weir’s model of reading comprehension based on which the current empirical study was carried out and the summary of this chapter.

READING THEORIES AND READING COMPREHENSION

Mental Model Theory This theory is based on the idea that a reader constructs a mental model or mental imagery of the circumstances that they are reading about. This is particularly the case when people read fiction. This construction of a mental model then assists the reader in their comprehension of the text.

Theories on reading comprehension - Teaching Reading ...

Reading comprehension is one of the most complex behaviors in which humans engage. Reading theorists have grappled with how to comprehensively and meaningfully portray reading comprehension and many different theoretical models have been proposed in recent decades (McNamara & Magliano, 2009; Perfetti & Stafura, 2014). These models range from broad theoretical models depicting the relationships and interactions among comprehension subcomponents to models of specific comprehension processes.

This being the case, it is generally believed that proficient reading depends on the ability to recognize words quickly and effortlessly. If word recognition is difficult, students use too much of their processing capacity to read individual words, which interferes with their ability to comprehend what is read.
