The Black Cultural Front | Brian Dolinar

Drawing on the idea of the Communist Party's Popular Front strategy of the late 1930s, Washington argues that the continued influence of a "Black literary, cultural and political left throughout the 1950s" constituted a "Black Popular Front" or what she calls a "Black Cultural Front." "During the Cold War," she argues, "when blacks were not even a blip on the white American cultural radar, it was in these leftist spaces of the Black Popular Front that African-American
