The entire process of organizing updated documentation according to ISO 9001 is commonly referred to as having a “control of documented information.” Like its name suggests, ISO 9001 requires that you have a “controlled,” or organized set of documents that reflect the details of your quality management system.

Control of Documented Information Explained ~~ ISO 9001

ISO 9001 document control is essential to a quality management system. Although organizations have flexibility in the way they choose to document their quality management system (QMS), the standard defines how organizations develop the documentation needed in order to demonstrate planning, operation and control of processes, and the implementation and continual improvement of the QMS.

ISO 9001:2015 defines documented information as meaningful data that is required to be controlled and maintained by the organization and the medium on which it is contained. Notes to this definition indicate that documented information can refer to the Quality Management System (QMS) and its processes, documentation, and records.

ISO 9001:2015 document and record control: The new approach

The ISO 9001:2008 standard provides a quick answer to the question of what must be controlled. The first sentence of section 4.2.3 on document control states, “All documents required by the quality management system shall be controlled.” This means that if a document addresses or relates to any of the issues in ISO 9001: it must be controlled.
