Reflexivity | Wiley Online Books

Reflexivity is sometimes regarded as a defining feature of qualitative research, a point of contrast from quantitative research where researcher subjectivity is viewed as a source of contamination or bias, especially in psychology (see Gough & Madill, 2012). In fact, for at least 30 years positivist notions of objectivity, neutrality and validity have been undermined by feminist theorists and other critical thinkers, invoking a 'crisis of representation and legitimation' (e.g. Denzin, 2001;
