Pixel Design for Digital Detectors Digital detectors require an array of pixels that collect electronic signals. The signals on these pixels are transferred to a computer during a readout sequence. This is known as direct readout, a function of all digital systems, and should not be confused with direct-conversion digital detection.

fundamentals of

Hybrid pixel detectors are a type of ionizing radiation detector consisting of an array of diodes based on semiconductor technology and their associated electronics. The term “hybrid” stems from the fact that the two main elements from which these devices are built, the semiconductor sensor and the readout chip (also known as application-specific integrated circuit or ASIC), are
